"Are you available?"
Gift Card Scam

If a supervisor or co-worker emails and asks you to buy gift cards, chances are good that it's a fake message from a cybercriminal. Know the signs and what to do.

What to Do

- Be suspicious of any email that makes unusual requests.
- Examine the sender's email and look for unusual variations of their usual address. Sometimes a letter or number is added, or a spoofed UW address may be used. Contact them with a trusted email address or by phone to verify unusual requests.
- If you receive a gift card message, send the email as an attachment to security@uw.edu
- Send other types of phishing messages as attachments to help@uw.edu
- Pass this information along to colleagues and friends.
